Monitoring systems, content management systems, backup software and firewalls are just a few of the applications that make life easier. These are all great when they work, but in the event of problems they can be a definite pain in the neck. It's not always a bad thing to have to upgrade a software, but when it comes to servers, web sites and other important online resources, it can be a whole lot more complicated than just upgrading the latest release. The following is a list of tools that can be of use when troubleshooting a server, web site or other online resource. These are not a definitive list of all the tools you can use, but instead a shortlist of the more basic ones. Some of these tools may be unavailable with some web hosts, but even if it is, there are other tools available which should be able to help you diagnose the problem and/or make it better. Slightly advanced, it enables you to monitor any combination of one or more servers, web sites and databases. It allows you to capture a lot of server and database information which can then be saved to an external file on your computer or to the Mission Control server. You can monitor any combination of one or more servers (which can be running on any platform, including Windows, Linux, Unix, Mac or Solaris), web sites, databases, files, e-mails, hardware, DNS records and much more. It provides a server monitor which can be used to view the health status of one or more server-side environments, access error logs and view network packet capture data. The Server Monitor also provides a historical trending view of the server-side health over a selected time range. FTP the Web Server A companion program to FTP, WinFTP serves as a simple visual FTP client, allowing you to copy files from a web server to your local computer or vice versa. Using a tool similar to FTP, WinFTP will allow you to list files and/or directories from the web server. FTP Assistant A
