Plot: Three sisters live in San Francisco in their deceased grandmother's house. They are born witches. All of the Halliwell sisters' female ancestors were witches. The fate of Prue, Piper and Phoebe is sealed. The sisters must accept the witch's ministry and give up going to church forever. The girls find the Book of Ordinances in the attic and cast an incantation over its pages. The magic begins! How did the magical power of the spell work? The sisters go from being enchantresses, capable of making any man's head spin, to being real witches! But that doesn't mean they give up the charms. Now they use them themselves. But not everything works out as expected. And they had hoped that the enchantments would work as they had intended. And yet, when the spells begin to work, they realize that everything does not go according to plan. In the end, it becomes clear that all is not what it looked like in their fantasies. What happens next. After Abby learns that she has a half-sister, she decides to meet her mother's family. As soon as she walked into the house, she realized it wasn't going to be that easy. But eventually the girl was able to build a relationship with her family. But her half-sister, whom she has never seen or heard from, wants nothing to do with her. Can Abby make her relationship with her family work out or will she have to be left alone?
