The authors report their experience in cases of post-traumatic muscle femoral shift that required muscle lengthening. A study was conducted on 86 consecutive patients, both primary and recurrent dislocations. The average age at the time of surgery was 32.6 years (range 7-56). The average follow-up period was 16 years (range 9-20). The procedure consisted in osteotomy of the femur and bone resection. In 5 cases the procedure was bilateral. In 11 patients the procedure was done for chronic dislocation. The average limb length discrepancy at the time of surgery was 12 mm (range 2-25) and the average muscle defect was 8.6 cm (range 3-20). The average limb length discrepancy at the time of the last follow-up was -1 mm (range -6 to +6) and the average muscle lengthening was 2 cm (range 0-11). Average final age at the time of operation was 44 years (range 28-56). The average post-operative follow-up period was 19 years (range 14-20). In 43 cases, the procedure was unilateral, in 43 cases, the procedure was bilateral. In 10 cases the muscle lengthening was superior to 9 cm, in 33 cases, the muscle lengthening was superior to 7.5 cm, in 8 cases, the muscle lengthening was between 7.5 and 6 cm. The average final limb length discrepancy was -1 mm (range -5 to +5).

The final muscle defect was 0.5 cm (range 0-3). This retrospective, clinical study shows that muscle lengthening can produce a significant limb length discrepancy, but it does not always lead to a satisfactory functional result. Therefore, the authors recommend that a multidisciplinary approach is the best solution. 1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to the field of well-logging. More specifically, the invention relates to an improved well-logging tool for use in conducting wireline measurements in a borehole. 2. Background of the Invention Well-logging operations have been performed for many years to detect the presence of oil, gas, and other minerals in a subterranean formation. To identify the location of potential hydrocarbon reservoirs, boreholes are typically drilled into the subterranean formation. In performing such operations, various
