Aug 14 . Q: WPF canvas mouse enter event not firing We have a custom control extending the WPF canvas. It is composed of several parts, including a rectangle which displays a label when clicked. The rectangle and label are the only parts which react to mouse clicks. The label is inside the rectangle and is its content. When the mouse is clicked, the label is displayed. As the mouse enters the rectangle, the rectangle should resize and the content of the label should change. That works when the mouse is clicked, but the rectangle does not resize when the mouse is hovering over it. The handler for the mouse enter event is in the code behind of the custom control. The handler is called, but the rectangle does not resize when the mouse is hovering over it. Is there a way to fix this? A: Right click, View in designer, click tab Canvas and select canvasslider from the list. This should resize your canvas to be parented to your control, it should make it work for the whole window/application. STOCKHOLM — Matteusz Kloc of Poland won men's slalom Sunday, continuing the dominant form of the halfpipe in Sochi. Kloc's win of 51.50 seconds was more than a minute faster than the second-place time of
