Two researchers at the University of Minnesota (UMN) are the first to demonstrate that they can send encrypted messages via Facebook Messenger, according to EWN. UMN assistant professor of computer science Robert Hansen and UMN doctoral student Mike Jones developed a code that enables a person to send a private, encrypted chat to another person with access to both of their Facebook accounts — even if the person at the other end does not have a Facebook Messenger account or is using a browser other than Internet Explorer. By using the Messenger interface and the person-to-person beta version of the feature called “secret conversations,” any messages that are exchanged stay encrypted, even if the recipient has access to the source’s Facebook account. “Messaging can be a very convenient way to send a secure message,” Hansen told EWN, “but it has all sorts of limits.” Unencrypted messages could be read by law enforcement or employers, who may use the messages

(previously called.NFO), which is a compact ASCII file similar to the old minimalistic fontello format (that is, except for one thing — it can contain a "packet" section, containing a lot of product-related information). Compact NFOs can be used to display generally large amounts of information in an easy-to-read format. In fact, they're structured like HTML documents — and they look like them, too! (Just leave off the header, of course.) So you can use it as a stand-alone HTML viewer, for previewing fonts, web pages, help pages, and even e-books. There is a massive amount of information in a compact nfo file; practically everything you'd ever need to know about a product is contained within them. Features:

- Preview any file (nfo or nfo-style)
- Zoom into specific sections
- Edit any file
- Print any file
- Find and correct any file (including long path names!)
- 'Record' changes made to files
- Have a browse-able list of recently edited files
- Attach files to new NFO files
- Auto-attached files (including windows explorer context menus)
- Use WYSIWYG style HTML
- A text editor
- A search tool
- The ability to add your own items to 'tasks'
- Collect 'items' from the local filesystem and attach them to an NFO file (or nfo-style)
- Add images and other art
- Add links (HTML style)
- Ability to make links clickable (to open in either nfo or file manager)
- Ability to add custom radio buttons
- All OS supported (and no funky web browser needed)
- Supports text and e-book files
- No installation needed
- No dependencies
- No ads or in-app purchases

If the purchase link is broken, or the store itself is not available, please e-mail me and I'll send you a free download key.

What's New In?

Simple, easy-to-use, speedy NFO Viewer The NFO format refers to an ASCII text file most commonly used to provide release notes for a software program. The typical association for this file format is Notepad and while it manages to successfully display the information included in NFO files, a dedicated viewer can often provide a more compact and stylish panorama (especially if ASCII art is included). One of the most appreciated utilities of this kind is Compact NFO Viewer, a small and portable utility that allows you to view NFO / DIZ / TXT files. It doesn't require installation and features a simple interface and a few menus that offer quick access to opening / saving files. Usage is simple: just open the browser and search for the respective NFO file (it instantly loads). If there are any links in the document, NFO viewer highlights them and makes them clickable. The Options menu enables you to set up the font and background color of the text and allows you to make the file read-only. You can also opt to attach an Explorer Context Menu item in order to have faster access to the program. Another possibility is to directly associate all NFO files with this utility, so that when you double click them, they will open directly in Compact NFO Viewer. All in all, this application is an efficient viewer for NFO files, but can process DIZ or TXT files as well. Its simplicity and ease of use makes it accessible to all audiences; game players and web developers especially can get a kick out of it. This is a little more advanced Excel macro that I wrote to clean up the contents of a file. It allows you to specify the columns and rows that should be removed from the file or even to add a header row. It allows you to either press Enter to do what you want the macro to do, select a cell to edit that row, or even drag and drop data from an Excel workbook. The macro can currently work with any Excel Version up to Excel 2007. This is a small text adventure game that takes place in a haunted house. Your goal is to find clues about the mysterious events that have been happening in the house, while encountering an assortment of bizarre creatures, ethereal voices and mind-bending puzzles. The game features user-defined variables for the red light timeout, the wizard's defeat, and the witch's death. A small
