Paul Mariner, FIFA Executive Producer at EA Sports, shared details on HyperMotion Technology at an EA SPORTS press event at the EA SPORTS FIFA Show today. “We’ve had motion capture teams in our studios for a number of years now, and we’ve been working on ways to power gameplay with the data they’ve collected from our players, and last year we powered an NBA Live title with it,” said Mariner. “But we wanted to make sure that FIFA was something really special, and because we were introduced to real football matches in motion capture suits, what better way is there to power the gameplay than through real football matches?” “We started off by approaching top German clubs such as VfB Stuttgart, Schalke, and Borussia Dortmund to see if they would agree to wear the suits and play a complete football match in the stadium,” said Mariner. “Using the data from these matches, we were able to develop a motion capture system that allowed us to capture the precise movements of players in a way that is totally accurate and captures every player in the game. This allowed us to combine the best of what we’d learned in the past with real football matches, and we believe that this will enhance the gameplay in FIFA.” “This has been a fantastic opportunity to capture the movements of 22 players at the highest level of football in the UK,” said Thomas Eichstädt, Director of the EA SPORTS UK Studio. “We’ve worked hard to ensure that all the players in this game are going to look and behave the way they do in real life, so we can capture their real movements. We’ve had this motion capture data for a long time, so we’re looking forward to seeing the results, as this game will be the first time this technology has been used in the FIFA franchise.” It’s all about accuracy. The motion capture data is only used in full-field gameplay. There’s a lot of play at the top level of the game which is above or outside the goal, so we can’t use the data for precision dribbling and passing. There’s a lot of player data used in in-game animations and camera placement, so we’re not using the data in animation sequences. But we are using the data for things

FIFA is a sport simulation video game developed and published by Electronic Arts. The series began in November 26, 1992 with the release of the game FIFA 1 for the Super Nintendo Entertainment System, and developed by EA Canada and Eidos (under the name of Unlimited Software). In July 1995 FIFA 2: European Edition was released for the 32-bit PC platform. The main series consists of the FIFA games, which have released on a variety of platforms since then. FIFA series launched its mobile phone version in 2007 FIFA 11 for iOS and FIFA 12 for Android. It is a multiplatform Football series developed by EA Canada, published by Electronic Arts and developed by EA Mobile. Since 2009 EA Sports is a developer and publisher of dedicated consoles and PC simulations such as Madden NFL and NHL series. In 2012 FIFA 13 - the tenth game in the series - was released for PlayStation 3, PlayStation 4, Xbox 360 and Xbox One. FIFA 14 - the eleventh title - was released in 2013 for PlayStation 3, PlayStation 4, Xbox 360 and Xbox One. FIFA 15 - the twelfth title - was released in 2014. In 2015 the fourteenth title was released, FIFA 15 on PlayStation 4, Xbox One and PC. In July 2016 FIFA 16 - the fifteenth title - was released for Xbox 360, PlayStation 3 and PC. FIFA 17 - the sixteenth title - was released in 2017 for PlayStation 4, Xbox One and PC. The seventeenth title of the series will be released in 2018 FIFA 19 for PlayStation 4, Xbox One and PC. The series has received many awards and positive reviews. How to play? The process of playing the game is very simple. You will be given the choice to compete in one of the pre-defined or custom match options. Before the start of the game you need to select a difficulty level - from the five standard and three progressively challenging play modes, like Pro, Amateur, Friendly, FUT or The Journey. After that you can select a suitable team or player. You will be given the opportunity to bring your new friends into a virtual game. The primary objective of the game is to successfully manage your team on the pitch. Your players need to either achieve an attack, defend, restart or goal for the win condition. This is the core gameplay of the game. As you play, you will get the opportunity to give your virtual players a rating, called FIFA Points
