Players can use the in-game camera to view the motion capture data in the form of orange dots on the player models; this can be used to view data such as the impact points of successful tackles, as well as the speed and direction of movement throughout the match. You can check out the video below to see a demonstration of the feature in action: The detail and density of the dot data can be found through the game's "Motion Champions" and "Highlight Reels" menus. Here are a few additional details on how player motion is collected with the above video, and what data has been collected for each player at this time: The players' full body motion are captured at a rate of 30 frames per second (fps) in order to create a highly realistic feeling of speed and ball movement. The game captures in-game player actions, such as shooting, passing and tackling, for the full duration of the game. This enables players to use all of the players' skills during in-game play. An additional series of motions were captured to measure the peak speed of players during sprints, acceleration and deceleration. These will be used in the game to provide a number of distinctive new player animations. The player actions are captured and recorded in 3D space. All the sequences are fixed, and players do not move. This is unlike a standard motion capture suits, where the players would move around and the motion-capture suit would have to track their movement. Each player has a particular "capture zone" where the action data is collected. The capture zones are located at the player's hips, shoulders and head. The capturing of this motion data is done with three optical markers. When the player is tracking the ball, the captures are done at the shoulder. When the player is tracking a pass or shooting, the captures are done at the head. Lastly, when a player is about to attack (tackling, shooting, passing, etc) the captures are done at the hips. In addition to the data, the player's height and weight were also captured. This was used to create a more authentic model that resembles the player's "on-field" size. In-game animations can also use data collected from the game, such as the capture of movements from players, the speed of movement, positioning of players and similar on-field detail. This data is captured in all
