Mass Maker - A Photographic

Timeline From a technical perspective, almost all mass-market B-level cameras are relatively robust machines that are fairly forgiving of any number of mistakes made by the photographer. However, they have been known to make mistakes too. The one thing they are NOT forgiving of, is covering up the lens with a hand. What I present here are some examples of mistakes that B-level cameras are not able to recover from. I have collected 26 images, all of which were taken with the MASS MADE and shot at f.8 and ISO 100. They were selected from those I have taken that day and week ago, all from spastic-ed first-timers. Some highlights: ***

The first image of this pack was taken whilst shooting the Mass Maker so you can see the viewfinder. The camera was not electrically powered and was set up using a palm rest. The camera was given a slight nudge whilst sitting on the cup for a few seconds so you can see the lens cover flop back down like a jelly. Image: A viewfinder through the lens cover of the Mass Maker.
