“Needless to say, this game is damn fun. But... the soundtrack? It’s even better. It’s got more than 80 compositions, with over a million views on YouTube, from a variety of different genres like Hardcore/Electro/Chiptune.” - - Tyler B. Johnson, Penny Arcade “The music in the game is ridiculously good. I’m a massive independent artist and I love seeing the game I’ve created supported on Steam.” - - Matteo Ricci, Playdead “The game’s soundtrack - an immersive chiptune trip through hell - was made by a multi-talented artist known as Mester Mix, who’s done the soundtrack for its predecessor, Incredipede.” - - Elaina, Rock, Paper, Shotgun “Speaking of Incredipede, Mester Mix is also responsible for the soundtrack to that game as well. The two games follow in a similar vein, but the music is incomparable. All tracks are playable to completion and have simple, catchy hooks that play off the gameplay in ways that are impossible to describe.” - - Tanya Stevens, Push Square “Incredipede had a simple plot, but the soundtrack was just as important to the experience. The game’s soundtrack was created by Mester Mix, who went on to create the terrific Super Motherload score.” - - Eli, Game Informer “The soundtrack is so goddamn good. Oh, my God, man.” - - Tyler B. Johnson, Penny Arcade “The Super Motherload soundtrack is comprised of 80+ compositions, with over a million plays on YouTube. The soundtrack is awesome.” - - Trevor “Danny” Martin, Nerd’s Dream “Listening to the soundtrack was the highlight of my Super Motherload experience.” - - Benjamin “Beni” Pi, Push Square “If you’re a fan of Incredipede, no doubt you’ll love the soundtrack to Super Motherload. Even if you’re not a fan of that game, the soundtrack to Super Motherload is worth buying. The quality is there and the music is decent.” - - Jake “Edgeknifemonster” Peralta, Push Square “

Official Website: To experience something special, experience it directly! The Heretic Hundred has replaced the Ecclesiarchy in Osprey, as the old order of the realm is swept away by the constant war in the south and the vengeful power of the Ospreys. Despite the Church’s efforts to shore up the stability of the holy kingdom through the discipline of the teachings and the strict order of the Liturgy, the circumstances of the people are constantly drawing them away from the carefully crafted imaginary of the Imperium. Rich individuals are fleeing to the havens of the Permides and Velkaradas, while the average citizen wants to enjoy their lives in the fresh air with as little interference as possible by the Church. The abominations of the Outer Darkness, and the grim reality of the tentacled monstrosities that call the Great Deep their home, have become common knowledge. The Imperium seems to be collapsing under the weight of both the Guardians’ assaults and the darkness that lurks in the very center of the Imperium. Stories of the People and their Kingdoms of Osprey are in their greatest need of your support. Have a look on my Facebook page. Gameplay: Into the Stars' gameplay is simple, turn based and mostly rules based. There are very few rules to follow and when rules do come up, they are easy to understand. Each of the six races play differently as well, and it is usually most effective to play the race you feel the most comfortable with. The art is very simple and mostly does a good job at getting your attention. I mean, it really needs to at some point or another. The strategy is simple, manage your resources and restock your ship. You only have a small amount of stock per round and each race has their own different needs. For example, Robots and Astartes require more Restock than Humans and each have their own needs. My biggest complaint with the game is the lack of research/combat, its not that bad, its just that its a lot easier to just run head first into everything than do any real research. There are 2 skill trees to select from that allow for the player to use their ships different abilities. These allow for better things to be done with your ship in various situations. I found that there are two skill trees that work best for the game, the first being the industry, which increases your ship's ability to repair themselves, upgrade themselves, build a ship in a different race. The second skill tree is the pursuit which increases your ship's abilities to detect other ships and any anomalies, which may possibly be useful for getting to your destination more quickly. The ship building is well done, you go through a limited amount of resources, which you spend to upgrade your ship to a specific ship tier and finally the ship itself. There are 6 races, with 6 ships to build and each race has its own unique abilities as well as the typical power grid. There are 10 star systems with 3 races each, you must manage your resources and upgrade your ships to traverse the whole star system. The AI is also simple, you are in charge of the race's ship until it enters into the star system, then the AI takes over and can communicate and act in a way that is best for them. The game allows for an infinite number of different scenarios, however you can only play through the same scenario as many times as you want. You can't mix the races, you either play with one of each race or you only have one of each race to play with, however if you are playing

The Wilhelm Gustloff disaster occurred at the opening of World War II when a passenger ship ferrying thousands of civilians from Stockholm to Norway, became engulfed in flames after a Norwegian mine barrage sank the ship about southwest of the Norwegian coast. In the hours and days following the sinking the full gravity of the situation emerged: there had been no passenger or crew defence, no massive rescue effort mounted by the Swedes, and some of the 2,791 passengers who died were probably burned alive as the ship went down. The Berlin-based propaganda service the Reich Ministry of Public Enlightenment and Propaganda (Reichs-Ministerium für Volksbildung und Propaganda or RMP) posthumously promoted Kurt Ludecke's crime novel Der Totale Wille zur Macht als Die Unterwelt der Wilhelm Gustloff. This was one of a number of atrocity narratives depicted in the genre where State and Nation were viewed as two competing entities engaged in a struggle for life and death. In 1970, Channel 4 in Britain broadcast a documentary that explored the history of the wreck of the Wilhelm Gustloff. The experience it depicted was that of Markus and Petra Undredal, survivors of the Stella Polaris expedition who lost their son Brian in the disaster. She was also the mother of Joachim Stefan, one of the few survivors of the wreck. In 1968, the history of the sinking was revisited by Billy Feferman, who called the disaster "the greatest submarine tragedy in human history". For decades after the war, the topic sparked strong emotions among those involved, including former SS officer Ernst Wilhelm Bohne. In 1991 the Norwegian government put out a stamp commemorating the Wilhelm Gustloff disaster and the unique 40th anniversary of the tragedy. Ship The SS Wilhelm Gustloff, a Japanese-built ocean liner of with a beam of and a length of, was one of the first of a new class of large passenger ships built in Japan in the late 1920s. His Majesty's Ship Wilhelm Gustloff, the Royal Norwegian Navy's and the Swedish steamship company's combined flagship, had been named after King Gustaf VI Adolf and had a crew and passengers from diverse backgrounds. Five large Pacific-style decks were surrounded by huge passenger cabins with some suites on the uppermost deck, a smaller dining room on deck four, an electric elevator to the highest staircase deck, two large swimming pools on the lowest deck, and more

Tribal Siege started as a simple game for 4 tribes. The game is getting bigger with 6 tribes. Now it's time to make a bigger game with multiplayer, Steamworks and many tribes. The North Sea race to build first is now over, and the Lego and Lego NEXO teams have taken the lead (exact race time not confirmed yet). In building for Lego NEXO, we are using the latest 9V BEC converter from BMC Electronics. We are connected to power and communicating via Bluetooth to our robot. This is connected to our tele-operated drone to give our robot better tools, a 360 degree camera, and the ability to use a crane to pick up a Lego piece for the robot to use. New NEXO robot is outfitted with a smaller Lego building sensor and a transmitter to communicate remotely to our server to trigger drone to pick up a piece for the robot to use. The Arduino is controlling everything, detecting a signal from the Lego sensor and the Bluetooth connection, and sending that data to our server as well as triggering the drone to pick up a piece and to send that data to the Arduino which relays that data to the robot. The Arduino would then use the information to trigger the crane to pick up a piece and to send that data to the Arduino which relays that data to our server. Using the Lego model we are able to easily control the crane arm to use the Lego sensor in the bot's end effector and find the right Lego piece to use. This builds are amazing. I have not seen anything like this before, and I am not sure what will happen next. Hello! And I'm back from my long break! I'll have more video for you on July 8th, when I start broadcasting new episodes of my show on twitch. The building season continues! All the details and pictures from the latest episode can be found here: I will have more building up and coming soon. Note: the times are approximate, and may vary slightly depending on the viewer's location. If you enjoyed, please comment, like or follow. Subscribe for more future episodes:
