$[\text{FeGe}(\text{AlMe}_4)_4]$: the single-molecule magnet behaviour of a uniform spin chain. The compound $[\text{FeGe}(\text{AlMe}(4))(4)]$ was prepared by reaction of $(\text{CH}(3)\text{Si}(2)\text{N}(2))(2)\text{Ge}$ with mesitylaluminum. Its powder X-ray diffraction pattern clearly shows the well-ordered hexagonal crystal structure of the compound. This compound is a rare example of a transition-metal compound showing both single-molecule magnet (SMM) and spin glass (SG) properties, presumably by a spin-frustrated network of Fe, Ge, and Al. The compound displays

SMM properties with two well-resolved transitions in the temperature dependence of the magnetization. Most remarkably, it also shows SG behaviour. Plastic card A plastic card is a card (like a credit card) or any other card made of polymer or similar materials. It is often called plastic.

Automobile cards In the United States, plastic car cards, or key cards, are often used for electronic access to automotive vehicles, such as charging stations or entertainment systems, that allow the owner to use the card as a key, pass code, electronic tag, or other access method rather than requiring a mechanical key.

Automobile key cards typically have features such as rotating access levers or wirelessly powered access, and they may have embedded security features. The first commercially available keyless access system was the BMW Card, introduced in 1977. Keyless systems are now common, with systems based on radio frequency identification technology (commonly termed RFID or "chipkey", "smartcard" or "electronic key" cards bff6bb2d33

Explore the entire world To explore the entire world, you will need to equip your Character with the right equipment. In order to equip the right gear, click on the Adventure map in your party's menu on the main menu. Other players are lchibo>Any wandering pirates who spied Kree Headless on the horizon were in for a treat. They set their sails and crossed the great seas, seeking their prey. They prepared to unleash one of the most brutal duels that the world had ever seen.

Upon nearing their port destination, the pirates noticed that their ship was coming into shore with an extraordinarily fast current and a great force. Someone possessed of a superhuman strength and speed was a few hundred paces directly in front of them.

Not having time to ponder the meaning of such an occurrence, the pirates slew the intruding swordsman and continued on their way. The man melted into the mist, and that was the end of the matter.

When they returned to port, they found that their captain, whose name was none other than Thupso, was standing at the

As one example, explosive trace detection (ETD) systems are commonly used to detect trace amounts of explosive and/or incendiary compounds, including compounds known to be used in plastic explosives. Conventional ETD systems may include a concentrator, a detector, and a controller. The concentrator is configured to receive a sample and separate the sample into a sample stream and a buffer stream. The sample stream may include the trace explosive and/or incendiary compounds, and the buffer stream may include all other compounds or particles in the sample. The sample stream is transferred to the detector where the detector may include a gas chromatograph, mass spectrometer, or other known sensor to detect the presence of any one or more explosive compounds or materials. The detector may alert the controller, which may proceed to an analysis. Common conventional or “on-the-line” ETD configurations have limitations in their ability to process a large sample volume, process samples having a wide variety of fluid and/or particulate volumes and concentrations, and/or handle a wide variety of particulate sizes/morphologies. Current ETD systems utilize a concentrator to concentrate the sample stream, which
