The invention relates to a method and a device for the continuous fine-grained to coarse-grained reduction of ore bodies, e.g. in the sense of the classic scheme from hand sieving to screening. In conventional mining methods, large volumes of waste rock are produced alongside the material being mined, which is correspondingly expensive to manage. A solution to this problem is the so-called mining recovery technique, which is based on the fact that, in addition to the actual material to be mined, minerals and rock material adhering to it are extracted from the waste rock on a large scale. The mixture of materials of this kind is known as tailings. Devices for the fine-grained to coarse-grained reduction of ore bodies which are based on hand sieving are known in the prior art, in which the ore bodies are passed through a long sieve slot in a generally vertical manner, so that the fine-grained to coarse-grained material to be separated is composed of big particles being taken by the sieve and small particles being drawn off by the slot. When using a slot of a predetermined width, which is kept constant in this method, there are limitations on the possible size of the ore body for a given sieve slot width, so that only ore bodies with a certain minimum size can be reduced in this way. It is an object of the invention to improve ore-body reducing methods and devices. In particular, an object of the invention is to provide a method and device for the continuous fine-grained to coarse-grained reduction of ore bodies, which can be used in particular for a continuous mine. It is a further object of the invention to provide a method and device which are characterized by low investment costs and low operational and maintenance costs. These objects and others which will become apparent hereinafter are attained in accordance with the invention by a method and a device for the continuous fine-grained to coarse-grained reduction of ore bodies, e.g. in the sense of the classic scheme from hand sieving to screening. In this case, the material to be mined, the ore body, is fed by means of a feed conveyor belt into a feeder, the feeder conveying the ore body onto an ore-body conveyor belt, which is disposed in the feeder. The ore-body conveyor belt
