But the British historian David Brion Davis has invented a new casualty list in the struggle between the black 'rebels' and the white King George's regime: black men executed by the British government for being debtors, black slave owners facing an economic crisis and black children being abducted to work on the sugar plantations. Double-branch Stokes mode waveguides can be created in silica glass by introducing an axial offset between the arms of the double-branch waveguide. To date, all methods to produce double-branch Stokes mode waveguide involve the creation of a second glass capillary that is aligned with the arms of the primary glass capillary. However, this method can be time consuming, and current techniques make it difficult to independently change the offset. We demonstrate a method to create double-branch Stokes mode waveguides using femtosecond laser cleavages as a means to independently control the offset between the two arms. We then demonstrate that this technique can be utilized to precisely create airbridge-type double-branch Stokes mode waveguides, which can be used as efficient unidirectional couplers for fibers.
