So for example, I'd like to pass my string as if it is an array: $params = ['a' => 'foo', 'b' => 'bar']; $output = call_user_func_array('functionName', $params); But the variable length string only holds one value: $string = 'foo'; How can I convert my variable length string into multiple arguments? A: You can concatenate multiple arrays using the + operator. The result is a new array with the elements of the original array appended together in the order they are found in the concatenated string. 'foo'], ['b' => 'bar'],]; $params = $params + $string; print_r($params); Will output: Array ([0] => Array ([a] => foo) [1] => Array ([a] => foo [b] => bar)) "Goats are more than animals. They are people who have so much to offer, as do we," Tom Cairns, the minister of agriculture, wildlife and fisheries, said in a statement. "This partnership brings together a modern and forward thinking industry with so much potential." Cairns said the government expected the new plant to generate 1,200 local jobs
