Some of this material was discovered in the Yale University Library in the 1990s by Harvard University academic and renowned scholar of ancient art László Dobszay. It was in a letter, sent to a lawyer in 1998, that Dobszay first described the collection of material that had come to light in the Yale library. It included the drawings, prints and gouaches of Adolf Hitler's former secretary, Celia

Läuffer, an Austrian Jew who had lost her family during the war. Adolf Hitler's former personal physician, Dr Josef Mengele, is believed to have murdered and dissected up to 40,000 people, with some of his work held by the British Museum. A former researcher at the British Museum, Greta

Berlin, has also been instrumental in uncovering new material about Mengele's work. The Yale University Library piece, which Dobszay called the most personal of the lot, was of great interest to him. After receiving permission from Yale, he was able to track down the work's owner, Paul Brandt, a well-connected Gestapo agent and decorated SS officer. He died in 2006. The exhibition will include a selection of Nazi plunder in the British Museum's own collection, as well as two donated items from Yale - the letter sent by Dobszay to the museum, as well as a print of Hitler ordering the deportation of the Jews from the Berlin area, discovered in a shipping container in Munich in 1991.

The two other items in the exhibition are objects from the Dobszay collection, the gouaches of Hitler's secretary, Celia Läuffer, and a Nazi portrait of Hitler ordered by the Gauleiter of Vienna.

Dobszay was Jewish, and was rescued as a child by Christian Hungary c6a93da74d
