reduce the size of your project to make it easier for the system to handle. after effects can render with a project of up to 4 gb in size, but it can only use about 3.5 gb of your system ram for the process. if your project is larger than this, it may take a long time to render and the render might fail. after effects cs4 requires a system administrator to install the quicktime plug-in. after effects does not include a built-in quicktime plug-in, and the quicktime plug-in is not included with after effects cs5. if you have a mac using os x lion, you may encounter a problem where the after effects application crashes when you attempt to create a new project. this is a known issue with os x lion and has been fixed in the new os x mountain lion. on windows xp, it is highly recommended that you use the quicktime player 7.8 plug-in instead of the quicktime player 7 plug-in. after effects does not include a built-in version of the quicktime player 7 plug-in, so if you use the quicktime player 7 plug-in, your project will not work in after effects. because it is not possible to render multiple files at the same time, the most convenient way to export multiple files is to render them to a single file. after effects also supports the following file formats when rendering to a single file: h.264, h.265, mpeg-4 part 2 and mpeg-4 avc. to render a file with any of these formats to a single file, choose file > render > file settings > output settings and use the output file format drop-down list to select the desired format. for more information, see output settings.
